ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

The present invention provides a system for identifying an individual by which identification of a client can be easily made, comprising: a means for storing the biological information of the client; a means for reading the biological information of the client; a means for checking the read biological information with the stored biological information; and a means for transmitting information to the server that they have matched in the case where the checking has matched.